Yoshiki Omote has been creating works that transform large movements and their origins into everyday scales, such as crustal movements and atmospheric phenomena that are difficult to grasp from the everyday person's perspective. In this exhibition, his first solo show in five years, he presents a new series of works, Streak, in which he fixes things generated in his daily life as an artist into his works. Streak," an exhibition that evokes geologically formed minerals and veins.

We hope you will look forward to this exhibition, which will remind you of the overwhelming time axis and sense of scale in our busy modern world, where the pace of global change is increasing day by day.

Artist Statement

Mineral shards lying around my atelier
A handmade mobile hanging from the ceiling of my house
Spray cans picked up at a scrap yard at work

I would like to present in the gallery a work created as if I were piecing together or piling up these fragments of memories that have been divisioned in my daily life.
